For this fashion-industry professional and her architect (and HL Rising Star) husband, weekends in Cape Town are done in style

Our ideal weekend is hard to define as our calendar fills up with varied activities ranging from 3D-modelling deadlines for Tariq to fashion events for me. When not on deadline Tariq is also consumed by his second master's in property development. I take these moments to slip away to the gym or the hairdresser. It's also the best time to catch up on the glossy pages of Vogue but, first, an early morning wouldn't exist without coffee.

Tariq will often hit an inter-architect-firm soccer game and then we'll spend some quality time together. A dose of vitamin D on the beach to unwind from the busy week is one of our favourite things. Recently our calendar has been filled with weddings in our circle of friends, which has entailed afternoon adventures in the beautiful scenery of the seemingly endless vineyards. We particularly enjoyed Lourensford Estate, which happened to appear twice on our calendar in one month.

When duty calls and exciting fashion events are happening in Cape Town we will attend. This year highlights included South African Menswear Week and Design Indaba.

If we are lucky to have the evening to ourselves a trip to a swanky Cape Town restaurant is on our agenda. Our palates are particularly partial to Asian cuisine and we've been known to indulge in a little fine dining at Kitima Restaurant in Hout Bay.

A perfect Sunday would entail waking up to a detox green juice (spinach, pineapple, apple and ginger – it's good!) and then, to slow things down, we enjoy taking a drive out to Franschhoek or catching a polo match at Val de Vie Estate. ☺
